CAPA's Positive Parenting Classes

Focusing on The Protective Factors Every Parent Should Know and Do:

1. Children Learn to Talk About and Handle Feelings

Nurturing and attachment – The importance of early bonding, as well as nurturing throughout childhood helps parents build a close bond with their children and better understand, respond to, and communicate with their children.

2. Parents Know How Children Grow

Knowledge of parenting and of child and youth development – Information about what to anticipate as children develop and strategies for effective parenting will help parents learn what to look for at each age and how to help their children reach their full potential.

3. Parents Can “Bounce Back”

Parental resilience – How parents cope and problem solve affects their ability to deal effectively with everyday stress or a major crisis. Recognizing the signs of stress and knowing what to do about it can help parents build their capacity to cope.

4. Parents Need Friends

Social connections – Identifying ways to help parents expand their social networks and build a broader base of parenting support is very important. Parents with an extensive network of family, friends and neighbors have better support in times of need.

5. Parents Know Where to Turn for Help

Concrete Support for Parents – Finding out what basic resources are available in the community and how to access them. These resources address family-specific needs such as financial management skills, housing assistance programs, and local health organizations which allow mothers and fathers to better attend to their role as parents.

6. Children Can Get Along With Others

Social and emotional competence of children – Parents and caregivers grow more responsive to children's needs - and less likely to feel stressed or frustrated - as children learn to tell parents what they need and how they feel. Delays in social and emotional development create extra stress for families putting them at greater risk for abuse.
